Northern Development Extends its Work

It is reported that the Northern Development have added several miles to their plans for road construction on the Coboconk-Dorset Highway. The new portion taken in extends from the boundary of Haliburton County to the village of Coboconk. Several camps are added to the number which are already in operation. The present camps have their full quota, with about 125 men in each camp. A gang of local men, under the supervision of Mr. Isaac Snell, commenced work on Monday a short way below the village. While weather permits these men will touch up the portions of road which have been completed, and later on will construct a new portion at Cameron Pond. Construction on the new Ox Narrows bridge was commenced this week above the site of the old bridge.

Lost on Father's Farm Little Lad Meets Death

Scores of men searched all Thursday night of last week in an endeavor to find little Bobby Jackson, two and a half year old son of Ellsworth Jackson, Galloway Township, but it was not until Friday noon that the body of this bright little chap was found about half a mile from his home.

Bobby left the house on Thursday morning to find his father, thinking that he was working near an old house on another part of the farm Failing to locate him, the child kept on walking, skirting along the edge of a swamp until from exhaustion he fell at a spot about half a mile from home and in the opposite to the way in which he had set out,

When the father came in to dinner and found his son missing, he commenced a search for him. Thinking he heard him call, he went in the direction of the sound and, as was afterwards revealed, passed within a few feet of where his child lay. Neighbors were notified and at about six o'clock word reached the village of Kinmount twelve miles away. Without delayed a large party was on its way to the farm to take up the search In spite of the cold and the wet the hunt was carried on unceasingly through the night and all next morning, when it was estimated that no less than 150 men were scouring fields, woods and swamp to find the wee tot At noon when the party had decided to search in another direction, one of the members walked but a few feet further and made the sad discovery. By the impression left in the mud it could be gleaned that Bobby had had not moved after he had fallen.

Ellsworth Jackson is one of the most widely known and highest respected residents of this section of the country, and his large circle of friends extend to him sincerest sympathy. It is just a few months over a year since this home was saddened by the death of the mother, who left a baby but a few days old.

The funeral of Bobby was held on Monday, when a large number of sympathetic friends gathered at the family home. Rev H.E. Pelletier and Rev. M. S. Lehigh, Kinmount clergymen, were in charge of the service and brought words of comfort to the bereaved. Interment took place in Kinmount Cemetery.

CHICKEN SHORTCAKE

2 cups pastry flour
(or 1¾ cups of bread flour)
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
½ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons shortening
1 egg ½ cup water

Sift dry ingredients; add shortening and mix in thoroughly with a steel fork; add beaten egg and sufficient water to make soft dough. Roll or pat out with hands on floured board. Cut out with large floured biscuit cutter, or half fill greased muffin rings which have been placed on greased baking pan. Bake in hot oven at 475° F. about 12 minutes. Split and butter while hot, and fill with hot creamed chicken. Makes 6 shortcakes.

Made in Canada

Great Britain

Great Britain has been the principal source of supply of anthracite coal for Canada in the past five months, accounting for 63.1 per cent. of the total against 36.9 per cent. from the United States, according to the latest report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The United States supplied 96.9 per cent. of the total bituminous coal imports, however, and Great Britain the remainder.

THE . . .

Mysterious Masquerade

By J. R. WILMOT

SYNOPSIS.

At a London dance club Molly Carstairs meets Roger Barling, who promises to get her a job. The following morning Molly is stopped by a policeman and taken to the station, where she is identified by a Mr. and Mrs. Silver as their missing niece. She discovers she is being used as a decoy in a gambling house. The Silvers next tell Molly that Major Carstairs her father is returning from India. Molly meets her supposed father and they take a flat in town. Roger Barling attends a dinner given by her father. She uses her loss of memory as explanation of her silence. The real Molly Carstairs writes demanding money and silence.

CHAPTER XXV.

Paul Silver had faced many crises in his life but none of them had been so critical as the present.

Three days had gone by since the visit of Major Carstairs and his presumed daughter—days of panic and agony. He had sensed that beneath Major Carstairs veneer there was a menace. The panic side of his nature had persuaded him thus.

On the other side there was Carstair's last words as they stood together in the hall: "When I come back, old man, Molly and I are going away into the country. I've grown a little weary of London and so I think has she. We're going to settle down, and it may be a long time before we meet again. So I have been thinking that before we go I ought to make you and Flora a little present—a small expression of my thanks to you both for all you have done for Molly during my absence. I am not a wealthy man, Paul, but I have some negotiable securities lodged at the Bank of France in Paris. They represent a thousand pounds. I hope you will not refuse them because I feel that I owe you a great deal. I have mentioned this now in the hopes that you will remain in London until I return."

Those words had remained indelibly limned on the tablet of Silver's mind. He had told himself many times that it was a nice idea, but what Paul Silver did not like were the Major's last words . . "that you will remain in London until I return." That, to Paul Silver, represented the nag. It sounded ominously like a threat, especially if, while the Major was in Paris, he took it into his head to inquire at the school where Molly was supposed to have finished her education.

But that was not all. Certainly the prospect of obtaining a cool thousand on top of everything else he had had, was not to be ignored. There were other things. Silver had not yet recovered from the menace which Roger Barling represented, the menace which had prevented his indulging in any further little "parties" at the house until the affair had blown over. He had mentioned the matter repeatedly to Judson, but the fellow appeared to be more sullen than usual; sometimes he was openly insolent, and Silver felt that he could no longer trust Mr. Judson further, especially as he had, as yet, failed to hear that the dead body of Roger Barling had been discovered lying around anywhere.

Silver might have surmounted these tribulations with his old philosophic ease had it not been for a third menace. Yesterday he had received an anonymous communication which hinted that the writer knew all about the fraudulent Molly Carstairs; that he (or she) was actually in touch with the rightful daughter of Major Carstairs, and that if he, Paul Silver, did not immediately post three thousand pounds in notes to an address in Greenwich within three days, an interested gentleman at Scotland Yard would be put into possession of certain information.

It was not the first anonymous letter Paul Silver had received during his career. This one unnerved him. Tomorrow Major Carstairs would return from Paris. If all was well, Paul Silver had every intention of skipping the county inside twelve hours. His wife, on hearing what had occurred, was all for going immediately.

"And let a thousand slip by?" he sneered. "Not on your sweet life. I'm no quitter at this game. As soon as I've got my hands on the goods—that will be time enough. You always were one for being scared, Flora. You leave this matter to me. I know how to handle the big situations." So it had been left at that. Paul Silver had certainly no intention of paying over three thousand pounds to some unknown person in Greenwich. He was too old a hand for that.

Meanwhile Molly had been enjoying Major Carstairs' absence in Paris. Roger Barling had been deputed to "look after her," and as a custodian of young ladies in the absence of their responsible parents he was such a success that he vowed that, if ever he fell upon evil times, he would take the business up professionally.

Yet all the time he was with Molly—and they had some really jolly times down in the country and elsewhere—he was conscious that he was entertaining a fraud, an imposter. But that thought only made it all the jollier for Roger. He was firmly convinced that, somewhere, there was a ghastly mistake, and that this sweetly attractive girl was no willing party to the fraud she was perpetrating.

He had discussed the matter quite fully with Cleveland, whose knowledge of psychology was something to be admired profoundly.

"As I see it, sir," Cleveland had said, "the young lady is acting under duress. She is the victim of a more powerful mind, an evil mind. I believe it is termed a condition of hypnosis. For some reason best known to the principal behind the plot, the Major must be hoodwinked into believing that the young lady is his daughter until such time as the principal deems it necessary to dispense with her."

And for once Roger had not smiled. He believed there was a great deal of truth behind Cleveland's extravagant language. No girl of Molly's disposition could ever have been guilty of wilful personation in this glaring and cruel manner.

If Molly could only be brought to confide in him, he knew it would help him considerably. At the moment he was working in the dark. For he did not want to do anything which would at all endanger the girl he loved. If she chose to remain silent, he could respect her attitude and continue to respect it.

As for Molly, while she knew she was drifting into a deep love for Roger, she knew also the delicacy of her position. She had heard nothing from Molly Carstairs. She had written to say that the Major was in Paris and that she would like to meet her to discuss things; but she had received no reply. Dearly she wanted to open her heart to Roger and tell him everything, but rather than lose his love for her she knew that she must remain silent.

Molly and Roger had been down into Surrey that afternoon in Roger's car. He had taken her to Dalton Towers and she had immediately fallen in love with the delightful old place. It was after ten o'clock when they arrived back in London.

Molly, tired after her day's outing, felt she must go to bed. Someone rang the front door bell.

On the landing stood Molly Carstairs, an angry glint in her eyes.

"What have you done with him? Where is he?" she demanded, mnacingly.

The girl pushed her way past into the flat.

"I don't know what you mean," faltered Molly.

"You're trying to double-cross me," accused the other girl. "You've done away with him. You've killed my father."

Molly sank down on to a divan.

"You wrote me that he had gone to Paris. I don't believe a word of it. You're in league with Silver. I've threatened Silver and apparently there's nothing doing. Why? Because between you, you've put him away. When did he made his will" she demanded, her eyes like fire.

Molly felt calmer now. "I really don't know what you're talking about," she answered quietly. "Major Carstairs is due back probably in the morning. He told me he went there on business. What that business was he did not tell me. But I do know this," Molly's voice rose in an almost hysterical crescendo, "as soon as he does return I am going to tell him everything."

"Fine words," sneered the girl. "But you can't fool me. Either you give me a hundred pounds now or I go straight to the police. How does that suit you?"

"Seeing that I haven't a hundred pounds it suits me quite well," Molly told her calmly. She felt suddenly glad. "There's the telephone on that table beside the bureau; or shall I call Scotland Yard myself?"

The angry gleam had vanished from the other girl's eyes. A warm smile came to her lips.

"I'm sorry," she apologized, "but I've been through hell since last we met. I've been battling with myself, as to what is the right thing to do. I've thought of fading out altogether ....letting this damnable world swallow me up. It's been torturing me long enough. By doing that I won't be disillusioning my father, for he will be horribly shocked when he knows what I've been through. I've tried to intimidate Silver, but he's still too strong for me, just as he always was. Some men are like that," she added, bitterly. "A woman has no chance with them."

The girl flung herself on to the divan beside Molly, and there were tears in her blue eyes. "You see," she went on, "If I do that, you'll be able to go on as if I were dead. Perhaps I shall be by that time; no one knows. Everything will be smoothed out and Father need never know."

Molly clutched the girl's hand desperately. "No, not that," she cried. "Not that! I want you to promise that you will leave this affair to me. That you will go home now and that you will stay there until I send for you. As you say, you've had a hell of a life. Well, the Fates owe you something, and I'm going to see that you're not cheated.

The girl beside her began to sob. "I'll do it," she assented.

As the two girls embraced, the telephone in the corner tinkled.

"Who was it?' asked the girl, as Molly came back to her.

"Your father," Molly told her. "He says he wants to see me at the Silvers. Silver is sending a car around in half a hour."

"Then I'm coming with you," announced the girl.

But Molly was adamant. "No," she countered, "not yet. Remember, you promised to leave this to me."

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by renewing the color of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, stockings, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical ones by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Des. They never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, when in the hands of even a ten-year-old child. Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out of cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called "the world's finest dyes'!"

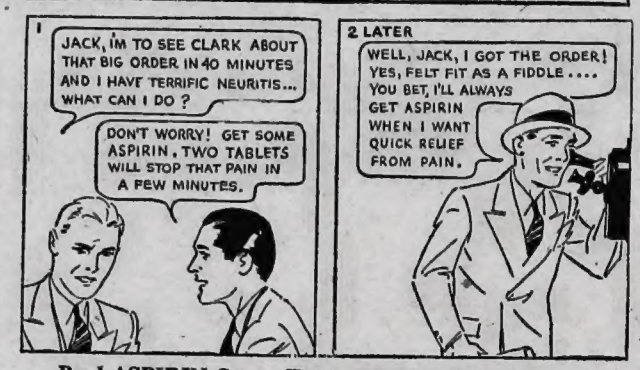
Quick Relief Now From Neuralgia



Real* ASPIRIN *Starts Taking Hold in Few Minutes

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered.

Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which an Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. An Aspirin Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, be on guard against substitutes. To be sure you get ASPIRIN'S quick relief, be sure the name Bayer in the form of a cross is on every tablet of Aspirin.

Can't Insure Hall's 3 Singing Voices

There's a limit to the variety of unusual contingencies that even Lloyd's of London will insure you against, it seems, that the sponsors of Wendell Hall, the "Red Headed Music Maker" seems to have run into something of a stone wall in their attempt to insure the voices of the lanky Red Head.

Note the plural, "voices", for Wendell sings in three distinct pitches, and his sponsors wanted to insure all three voices for $100,000 against mishap. They made application with the A. F. Shaw & Co., Chicago agents of London Lloyd's, for the insurance but for once the renowned London firm was stumped, according to the Chicago agency.

And that's no reflection on the permanency of Wendell's three voices, either, for he's had them all for a good many years now, and the chances are that he'll have them for a good many years to come.

Eddie Cantor, shortly before his return to the air channels, was being interviewed by a Hollywood girl for her high school paper. He had just come off the set fatigued from an exhausting scene. "Why, Mr. Cantor", she queried, "what makes you look so old?" . . . "Trying to keep young", wearily replied Eddie. . . "Trying to keep young?" repeated the puzzled youngster. . . "Yes — four of 'em," explained Eddie.

Phil Baker, the Armour Jester, while playing a New York vaudeville theatre years ago, gave each of the Neil Sisters, fellow artists on the bill, a $5-gold piece as a luck charm. Promptly the Neil Sisters' booking went wrong and it wasn't until necessity forced them to liquidate the "charms" that luck changed for the better.

Bi-Weekly Program Gaining in Popularity

Tuesday and Friday at 2 p.m. brings to the microphone Lionel Scott, well known interior decorator.

For many years Mr. Scott has contributed his ideas to the leading magazines throughout the Dominion.

Through this novel broadcast you will be able to participate over the air in the private consultations of this well-known interior decorator.

By special arrangement with station CFRB over which this feature is broadcast Mr. Scott will answer personally, your questions pertaining to interior decorating. All questions should be accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope to insure a reply.

October

Dusty rusty bracken;
Thistedown afloat;
Hills, blue-shadowed and withdrawn
To distances remote.

Milkweed feathers blowing
From a frosted pod;
A cocoon spun upon a spray
Of fading goldenrod

Cricket banjos in a geld
Of rustling corn tepees;
Apples on the ground beneath
A row of pippin trees.

The arrogance of summer
Subdued somehow and sober—
Smoke and bonfires, falling leaves,
One last rose—October.

—Ethel Romie Fuller.

Gt. Britain's penny postage-stamps, of which more than 1,000,000,000 are used annually, are to appear in a deeper shode of red next year.

Charming Fall Dress

By HELEN WILLIAMS.

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern.

The material is the new worsted crepe mixture. It falls so gracefully and is so exceedingly smart this season for school wear.

Juniors will love this model. It can also be made with long sleeves.

For more dressy wear, carry it out in faille crepe silk in light run shade.

Tartan plaided gingham, wool jersey and wool and synthetic mixtures are other suggestions.

Style No. 2892 is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15 and 17 years.

Size 15 requires 3¾ yards 39-inch with ⅝ yard 35-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 15c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Unto the Autumn Hills

Rare flowers bloom in gardens
In man's immediate care:
The glory of the Autumn
Grows freely everywhere

No loveliness, no vision
More wonderful could be
Than this rich, changing colour
Breathed out from every tree.

Once, in a perfect garden,
GOd walked at eve, they say.
Behold, His steps are passing
Upon these hills today!

—Minnie Hallowell Bowen.

EXCESS FAT DUE TO RHEUMATISM

One Remedy for the Two Troubles

Having rheumatism so badly that she could scarcely walk, this woman began to put on a load of superfluous flesh. In a letter just received, she writes:—

"I had a severe attack of rheumatism in both knees. It was so bad that for three weeks I could not put my feet to the ground. I was also getting terribly fat—through not getting my usual exercise. I started taking Kruschen, and persevered. The first thing I noticed was the tonic effect it had; the next that my rheumatism went, and—better than anything — I lost the wretched fat. I am a woman of 50, and when I tell you I do exactly the same work as women half my age without the least difficulty, I think you will understand why I swear by Kruschen Salts and recommend them wherever I go."—M.E.

The six salts of Kruschen assist the internal organs to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely. The rheumatism and headaches disappear. You feel wonderfully healthy, youthful and energetic—more so than ever before in your life.

Woman's Chatter...

By MAIR M. MORGAN

FOR DAILY LIVING

R. M. N. Tisdall, British Olympic Champion has some very definite rules which he follows in his daily routine of keeping fit. On looking these rules over, it is quite apparent, that this business of keeping on your toes, is simple and demands no expenditure other than the development of sheer commonsense, which so many of us lack in our daily living. Here they are:

1. Never jump out of bed immediately upon awakening. Have a good stretch first, then get up without delay.

2. Never take violent exercise before breakfast. A little systematic stretching, copying the movements of the domestic cat, and a few minutes' deep breathing at an open window are sufficient.

3. Have a cold shower and a brisk rub-down if your constitution will stand it; if cold water fails to induce a warm glow, however, try a tepid shower instead, followed by plenty of friction.

4. Don't fuss about food. Eat whatever suits you, but rigidly avoid whatever does not. Always stop as soon as you feel your appetite is beginning to wane; enough is better than a feast. Drink plenty of cold water between meals. Smoke if it soothes your nerves, but inhale as little as possible.

5. Don't indulge in violent exertion until two hours after a meal; never go in for any exercise that bores you—choose something you can enjoy or it will do you no good.

6. Let the sun and air get to your body as much as possible; see that your clothing is loose and light. Tight collars and shoes should be avoided.

7. Take an occasional rest-pause during the day. Sink into an easy chair and recline on a couch and relax your mind and body completely; it is Nature's finest tonic. When you are "off-color" spend a day in bed if you can afford it; it will often work wonders.

8. Don't worry over things until they happen; then it will be too late.

9. If you go in for physical exercise, perform them just before you go to bed; they will help you to induce sound sleep. Don't indulge in them when you are feeling "dog-tired," however; instead, simply stretch your limbs and run your hands over the surface of the body with a brisk rubbing motion towards the heart. But be careful to distinguish between tiredness and laziness.

10. Common sense and moderation in all things.

With winter and the accompanying ills—colds, influenza, nerves, etc., and above all the lack of the life-giving sun, these rules might well be followed by everyone and a comfortable winter insured. Knowing how easy it is to slip back into sluggardly habits, I would suggest pasting these rules on a piece of cardboard and placing in a prominent position in the household.

ON SMACKING

New York's magistrate, Jonah J. Goldstein, last week upheld the right of a neglected wife to smack "the other woman". A nice point! In dismissing assault charges preferred against the defendant, the Magistrate said: "Laws were enacted by human beings to regulate the conduct of human beings. With this in mind, I hold that a person is not required to be superhuman in the control of his or her conduct in this case, the defendant, a wife and mother of three children, failing to receive support from her husband, looked for and found him in the apartment he was occupying with the other woman.

"A wife meeting the other woman, the natural result is a clash and unpleasant words. I hold that the result of the natural impulse in this case is not a violation of the criminal law."

BOOKS

"Valerie Hathaway" by Claudius Gregory (McClelland and Stewart, Toronto), $2.50, is a story which will appeal to those who are interested in the deeper aspect of love; the relation between mental and physical love and the part they play in the life of a man or a woman. While the subject dealt with offers the author a chance to become wordy and heavy, perhaps, Mr. Gregory, escapes such an accusation, and offers a novel that can be read by everyone, from the flapper to the professor. As books are always acceptable as gifts—and the season is drawing near, it would not be amiss to put this book on your gift book list.

The Royal Family and the British Taxpayer

There was a surplus revenue in 1922-23 from the crown estates (which King George handed over to the nation on his accession) of £900,000, being a net sum from which no deductions have to be made for administration. The annuities payable from this surplus to the King and Queen and for salaries and expenses of the household, amount to £47,000, while the additional annuities to the King's mother, uncle and aunts and sisters, and to the King's children (except the Prince of Wales), amount to £163,6666—a total civil list of £633,666. The nation, therefore, profits to the extent of £266,334, instead of being taxed for the support of the reigning house. The Prince of Wales' income is derived from rent of lands in the Duchy of Cornwall, which was created a duchy by Edward III., for the support of his eldest son. Since that time the eldest son of the sovereign has been born Duke of Cornwall.

Minnows solved a serious problem for the Italian engineers who wished to develop Istra, on the east shore of the Adriatic. The place was full of stagnant ponds in which malaria-bearing mosquitoes flourished. The pest was conquered by introducing a special tpe of minnow from Carolina, U.S.A., which eats mosquito eggs greedily.

Don't Fear Motherhood

THOSE women who dread motherhood should follow the advice of Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas of 95 Kimberley St., Toronto, who says: "At one time, before my baby came, I was not feeling well at all. I had no strength and had constant headaches. My mother advised me to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I took only two bottles of it and it surely did help me. It built me up, I regained my strength and the headaches disappeared. I came through the rest of the period with very little difficulty." Sold by druggists everywhere.

Write to Dr. Pierce's Clinic, Buffalo, N. Y., for free medical advice.

Small Girl's Positive Definition Is Good One

"Isn't that lovely?" said grandma to a three-year-old. "Yes," assented the minute granddaughter, "it's grand iful." Why not? The word is as good a hybrid as a thousand that have butted their way into the dictionary, and it gives full value, combining, as it does, the concepts of beauty and of grandeur. I think it is worth keeping.

So are some of the definitions invented by the same embryonic lexicographer. "A man and a boy was there," she was declaring; "not two men, just a man and a boy." Not quite convinced, her aunt inquired, "What is the difference between a man and a boy?" "Men spank boys," was the prompt and positive answer. How useless it is to deny that our whole Weltanschauung is based on social distinctions! Are all men born free and equal? Possibly; but they remain in that grandiful state of equality only as long as they are unspankable. Once the age of spankability sets in, society splits into two strata, the spankers and the spankees, and remains thus cleft.—Charles Hall Grandgent, in "The New Word."

Life Not Particularly Sacred in Nicaragua

The shadow of the electric chair or noose holds no terror for the Managuan murderer. Supplying extra trade for the undertaker in that Nicaraguan settlement entails but a 30-day visit to the city jail.

A picture of this community where fighting is the chief fun, although it involves a funeral or two, is portrayed by Alicia Patterson in Liberty. She writes: "The natives are half or more Indian, which explains a lot of things. Fighting is their favorite pastime. They have no fear of death and kill each other off as casually as we would shoot crows.

"The penalty for murder is thirty days. No one goes out on the street without a revolver. The natives are all horribly poor and rarely have enough to eat. But as long as they can keep alive they refuse to do any work. Work to them is worse than death. They die young. A man of fifty is considered old."

Cariboo Gold Rush

On March 15, 1857, gold was discovered in Cariboo, British Columbia. "Into the waters of bays and wide rivers, ruffled only by the swiftly gliding canoes of painted Indians, came slowpaced sailing ships and spluttering steamers," all [illegible] with men mad for gold. The Hudson's Bay forts grew suddenly into towns, and Factor James Douglas showed himself to be so strong a man in keeping tolerable order among 15,000 whites, practically all men and "many of them ruffians," 2,000 Chinese and 15,000 Indians, that, when the Pacific colonies became the province of British Columbia, he was made Sir James Douglas, the first governor.—Montreal Family Herald.

Beautiful English Cathedral

England's most beautiful cathedral, at Salisbury, has been called England's finest poem in stone. It is, indeed, the most harmonious and best proportioned of the English cathedrals, for it was built within the short space of 40 years (1220-1260), where many others have taken centuries to complete them. It is a pure example of early English architecture, unalloyed by foreign influence. Its spire, rising from the very middle of the church, is the loftiest in England.—Detroit News.

First Methodist Chapel

The first Methodist church erected, John Wesley's chapel at Broadmead, England, has been completely restored and was recently reopened with impressive evangelistic services. It stands on the first plot of ground that Wesley ever bought and in it is the pulpit from which the noted evangelist so often preached.

Man of Peace Honored for Wartime Invention

A clergyman who evidently did not consider that there was anything incongruous in serving the prince of peace and at the same time inventing "gadgets" to help in the maiming and killing of his fellow-men has a tablet to his memory at the Tower of London—quite an appropriate place.

He was Rev. Alexander John Forsyth, a Scotsman, who invented the percussion lock for small arms, and who also produced a detonating powder for which, it is said, he was offered $100,000 by Napoleon. Forsyth left his quiet manse to work in the Tower, and when his duties were over he returned to his village with an honorary LL.D. degree. The reverend inventor died in 1843. His is the first memorial to a private individual that has been erected in the precincts of the Tower.

Ben Damph Is Damp

Ben Damph, a rambling country mansion belonging to the Lovelace family, is perhaps about the most inaccessible house to be found even in Scotland. It is also one of the wettest. Rain falls almost continuously. The nearest village is about eleven miles away, and the household is consequently, of necessity, self-supporting. Fish from the loch, cattle from the pasture, and game from the moor provide the staple sustenance of those staying at Ben Damph.

Electrical Term

The bureau of standards says that a lazy-man switch, also called a three-way switch, is electrically a single-pole double-throw switch. Using two of them, a light can be controlled from two places, such as upstairs and downstairs in the case of hall lights. A related switch, called a four-way switch, is electrically a double-pole reversing switch. Any number of four-way switches may be used with two three-way switches to control a light from any number of points.

Venerable Flemish City

The city of Ghent in Flanders has existed from the very earliest times and no exact date can be given for its settlement, nor is the derivation of the name accurately known. The site was occupied by prehistoric tribes and later by the Celts and Belgii and Nervii. It is mentioned as early as the Seventh century. According to one author, Ghent was originally Gand which derives from a Celtic word meaning "confluent," in reference to the location of the city at the confluence of the rivers Scheldt and Lys.

No Wonder

Two strangers on a train got into conversation. The windows had just been let down and the desultory chatter consequently turned to the subject of ventilation.

"I make it," said one of the two, "an invariable practice to advise people to sleep with their bedroom window open all the year round."

"Ha, ha!" laughed the other; "I perceive that you are a doctor!"

"Not at all!" was the reply. "To tell you the truth, strictly between ourselves, I'm a burglar!"

Castles in the Air

"If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the props under them," said Henry David Thoreau. Helen Keller says we cannot always realize our ideals, but we can always realize our realities, and our ideas must be practical if we are to make a religion of them and live by them. Phillips Brooks expressed a high ideal in these words: "We reduce life to the pettiness of our daily living. We should exalt our living to the grandeur of life."

Heat Homes From "Bottle"

Homes of the future will be heated by electricity "bottled" up in a reservoir in the house at night when the electric company's facilities are not busy, and used the next day, in the opinion of Chester I. Hall, an electrical engineer. The "bottle," containing water, would be heated during the night by electrodes which would raise the water temperature to boiling. By reason of insulation, the reservoir would retain its heat during the day. It would be equipped with thermostatic controls. Such a heating plant would be economical, it was estimated, if the power company could store the heat during the idle hours of the night.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Right Diet Affects Teeth

If you want strong, white teeth pay attention to your diet as well as to your toothbrush. The food you eat is just as important as the dentifrice you use.

Dr. Walter H. Eddy, food chemist and health authority, offers this advice. Several recent surveys, he reports, have shown that individuals whose diet was deficient in milk and green vegetables were possessors of weak and quickly decayed teeth because the blood which feeds the teeth was not sufficiently supplied with the necessary lime salts to give them strength.—Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Wily Elephant

Though tigers and leopards cannot, as a class, be said to sham death, there have been instances in which one of these—after having to all appearances, been shot dead—has suddenly "come to life" and been very much alive, until finally dispatched. There is an instance on record of a newly captured elephant playing the "artful dodger" so successfully that it completely deceived its captors, who, releasing its bonds, left it for dead, but scarcely had they gone a little distance when, to their amazement, the creature rose, and trumpeting loudly, made good its escape.

Ruins of Clonmacnoise Venerated by Irishmen

Clonmacnoise occupies a delightful spot on a series of small eminences upon the banks of the River Shannon. Only a small part of the great abbey building is still traceable, but there are numerous ruins of churches and other structures once connected with it, some of them far off in the surrounding valleys.

The principal ruin is that of the great abbey church and cathedral, built in 909 by Abbot Colman Conaillech, with the assistance of King Flann Sinna, son of Malachy I, in whose honor the abbot erected before the entrance a great stone cross with Irish inscriptions and sculptures representing Biblical scenes, which have given it its name of Crossa-Scriptra, "Cross of the Scriptures."

Near it are two round towers which answered the combined purpose of belfries in time of peace and places of refuge and defense when danger threatened.

In the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries this church was rebuilt by Tomaltech MacDermott, and is now known as the Teampal MacDermott. The last of the Irish kings, Roderick O'Connor, lies near its altar with his father Turlough.

Clonmacnoise is still the favorite burial place of Ireland, and many hundreds of faithful are laid to rest every year in the sacred dust upon which St. Kiernan trod, and after him so many generations of the great and holy men and women of Erin.—Washington Star.

Mexican Code of Honor Strange to Americans

In many business places of the City of Mexico, cuspidors are chained to the desk or wall to prevent some intruder from carrying them off. On the streets office boys carry thousands of dollars in canvas bags on their shoulders from banks to offices. Business men convey the day's receipts to the banks shortly before the closing hour. Their habits in this respect are known to every crook in Mexico, yet it isn't once a year they meet with a holdup. One's cook is trusted with from $10 to $20 to go to the market, and she returns and accounts for the money, yet while her employer's back is turned, she will shove five cents worth of tea, coffee or sugar into her pocket. To take money intrusted to her to do the marketing would be thieving, but in taking little things from the kitchen supplies, she is following the custom of the ages.

Death Ended Argument

An awesome debate between two Basuto witch doctors recently ended sensationally at Teyateyaneng, North Basutoland. The witch doctors were arguing about their powers before a great crowd of natives, and the elder of the two stated with considerable emphasis that the other was "only a boy" and could not possibly have the powers which he himself claimed to have. He added that if he (the elder) willed that the other should die, he would die. The younger man took up the challenge and the older one pointed at him with a stick and said solemnly, "You will die." The young man then rose to his feet, staggered and fell against some barbed wire and immediately expired. The other witch doctor was placed under arrest, but was released after the post mortem examination which showed death to be due to a stricture.

Ivy Unpopular

Ivy has so long been used as a symbol of close and undying affection that it is uncomfortable to find a controversy going on as to how to kill and exterminate this "pestiferous plant." It is a beautiful thing, ivy; its leaves are exquisitely shaped; its color is satisfying. Yet we are told now to look upon it as an enemy both to buildings and trees. All the same, I know walls covered thick with ivy where I used to locate birds' nests, which I shall always regard with affection. And I have known trees smothered by ivy which were far less pleasant to look on than the creeper which deprived them of life.—Montreal Family Herald.

Mongol Never Hurried

Caravans cannot be hurried, for the Mongol takes his own time. Centuries of experience have taught him how much a camel can successfully do, and he will not push his animals beyond their endurance. Camel caravans can penetrate to every nook and corner of Mongolia, bringing out valuable products for export. The Mongol camel puller will guide his caravan straight across the plain to any desired destination and there pack his loads and take good care of them, but often he will be a year, or two or three years, bringing in the goods.—Frans August Larson's "Horses and Business" in Atlantic Monthly.

LOOK TO VALUE

It is fundamental principle of economics that cost has no meaning except with reference to value. It is not the price that counts, but what is purchased for the price.

There is always a tendency, in times like these, to lose sight of this elementry truth. The "Bargain Appeal" is very powerful, and may blind purchasers to obvious faults in material and workmanship.

In our dealings with our patrons, we offer merchandise and service at a wide range of prices. But, at every level, we give superlative value and service that is unexcelled in thoroughness and reverence.

Pleased With Canada

The magnificent scenery of Canada so enthralled Lord Macmillan chairman of the Royal Commission on banking, that Scotsman though he be, he confessed, just prior to sailing for England on the Empress of Britain, that it dwarfed the scenery of Scotland, and that the only thing needed was for some author to blend it with the romantic history of Canada, as Sir Walter Scott had blended the scenery of Scotland with the romantic history of the land of Bonnie Prince Charlie. A lake he visited in the Gatineau Valley he admitted was more magnificent than Loch Lomond, while his description of Lake Louise was that it seemed to him almost a celestial vision. The Butchard Gardens in Victoria he asserted to be the most beautiful sight that the eye could rest on — in fact throughout the whole of the Dominion the eminent Privy Councillor found beauty everywhere he went, and declared that he would carry back with him memories that he would cherish.

OBITUARY

JOHN FRANCIS

On Monday, October 9th, 1933, death claimed one of Gelert's most highly respected citizens in the person of Mr. John Francis, in his fifty-eighth year.

Death came as a great shock as he was apparently in good health until inflamation of the brain set in two weeks prior to his death.

Mr. Francis was widely known as a kind and generous friend and neighbor, always ready to give a helping hand where needed. He was a son of the late John Francis and was born in England on January 15th, 1876, coming to Canada with his parents in 1883, when they settled in Snowdon Township, where Mr. Francis has spent most of his life. He was married on the 13th day of April 1904, to Lenora Stevens, daughter of Mr. Henry and the late Mrs. Stevens of Minden and to this union eleven children were born, all of whom came home to be with their parents during the father's illness and death. They are Susan (Mrs. Jos. Winters), Edna (Mrs. Harry Esler) of Toronto, May (Mrs. Orval Hicks) of Lochlin, John, Jr., of Donald, Charlie of Gelert, and Edward, Orval, Allen, Carl, Myrtle and Ivan at home. Also three sisters and three brothers, namely Mrs. T. J. Holland, Mrs. G. Holland, Mrs. T. Corbidge and Mr. Albert Francis all of Toronto, Thomas of Gainsboro, and Arthur of Lochlin, all of whom are left to mourn the loss of a loving father and brother, and who were able to be present at the funeral except Mrs. T. J. Holland, who had visited her brother just a few days previous to his death. Two sisters predeceased him, namely, Jennie [Mrs H. Copp] of Toronto, and Maud [Mrs. W. Beamish] of Alberta.

The minister who performed the marriage ceremony visited the bereaved wife and family with words of comfort and prayer, but was unable to remain to conduct the funeral services which were conducted by the Rev. R. R. Bonis of Minder, on Thursday, October 12th, at 2 p.m. at his late residence, interment being made in Gelert Cemetery. The pallbearers were the three eldest sons. John, Charlie and Edward, [Ted] and the three son-in-laws, Jos Winters, Harry Esler and Orville Hicks.

Much sympathy is extended to Mrs. Francis in the loss of a most affectionate husband, and the very large attendance at the funeral together with the many beautiful floral tributes showed the love and esteem that was held for the late Mr. Francis by those who knew him best.

The floral tributes were as follows:
Broken Circle—Wife and Family.
Wreaths—Mr. and Mrs. A. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. C. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. A. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. R. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. I. Walker, T. Eaton Auto Delivery.
Pillow—Lochlin United Church
Sprays—Mrs. T. J. Holland and family, Mr. and Mrs. T. Corbidge, Mr. and Mrs. R. Copp, Mr H. Stevens, Mr and Mrs. H. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. C. Hobden, Mr. and Mrs. S. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. J. B Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. E. B Fielding, Mr. and Mrs. W. Dugan, Mr. and Mrs A. Hewitt, and the Mystic Link Rebekeh I.O.O.F.

Those from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Geo Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Holland, Mr. and Mrs. T. Corbidge, Mr. and Mrs. R. Copp and Harold Copp, Mr. Albert Francis all of Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Evres and Master Glen, and Mrs. Ralph Branden of Cameron.

Two People Asphyxiated In London Garage

Dr. Roland Jarvis and Daughter Found Dead in Car—Engine Left On

London, Ont., Oct. 15.—Shortly before 11 o'clock to-night Dr. Roland D. Jarvis, 63 Elmwood Avenue, and his daughter Beatrice, aged 20, were found dead in their garage, asphyxiated by carbon monoxide fumes from their automobile.

The doctor, for over 30 years one of the most prominent dentists in the city, and his daughter apparently had been sitting in the car talking, and failed to realize that they had left the engine of the auto running.

Doctors Kelly and Graham and Coroner Dr. J. C. Wilson were called. For almost an hour the physicians worked over the two, but without reviving a spark of life.

Coroner Wilson was informed that Dr. Jarvis and his daughter had left their home about 6 o'clock this evening after telling his sister, Miss Bertha Jarvis, that they intended to go for a drive. She was somewhat disturbed when they had not returned, and decided to investigate. They were found lifeless in the car in the garage.

Robert P. Haskett, a neighbor, summoned by Miss Jarvis, entered the garage and pulled both bodies into the open air, but subsequent examination showed they had been dead for about five hours.

No inquest will be held.

A son of the late Dewitt Jarvis of this city, Dr. Jarvis was born here. He attended London schools and graduated from the Ontario Dental College in Toronto. He had practiced here ever since.

Dr. Jarvis is survived by two brothers, Covert in Philadelphia and Clifford in Western Canada, and a sister, Bertha.

Geneva Speakers Attack Germany

Lord Cecil Accuses Country of Obstructing Disarmament

Geneva, Oct. 15.—German was subjected to a bitter attack by speakers before a huge peace manifestation to-night. The mass meeting passed a resolution expressing its "earnest desire for a successful issue of the disarmament conference."

Lord Cecil of England, heading the battery of orators, declared to the crowd which packed the hall of the reformation that failure of the conference would, perhaps, "irretrievably wreck world peace." He flatly accused Germany of obstructing disarmament.

"Germany has done her best," he said, "to prevent disarmament, but her attitude is one which must not be permitted to paralyze the action of all the others."

He urged that the rest of the nations should draft a convention and give Germany the chance to accept or "shoulder responsibility for the rejection." He said the state of anxiety already existing in Europe was rendered acute by Germany's withdrawal from the conference.

"It is no exaggeration to say," he declared, "that if the disarmament conference fails war will be brought definitely nearer."

Prolonged applause followed Lord Cecil's declaration that the glorification of militarism "cannot be allowed to turn the world into a human shambles."

The manifestation was organized by the international consultative group for disarmament which is composed of the federation of the League of Nation Societies, the inter-parliamentary union, and several similar organizations.

Brief messages of greetings from Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, President Roosevelt and other statesmen were read.

Premier is Named In Island Province

Charlottetown.—Hon. Dr. W. J. P. MacMillan, designated Premier of Prince Edward Island, to succeed the late Hon. J. . Stewart, K.C., submitted his selection of Cabinet Ministers to Lieutenant-Governor Charles Dalton.

The list includes all members of the Stewart Administration, and adds Hon. Dr. Augustine A. MacDonald of Souris, King's County, present Speaker and oldest member of the Legislative Assembly.

Ottawa Issues Book Covering the Customs Act

Ottawa.—A consolidation of the Customs Act, together with all amendments to the tariff, has been completed by officials of the National Revenue Department in a comprehensive volume just issued. The book contains all the Canadian trade treaties and interpretative notes for the guidance of importers. A number of explanatory appendices also add to the elucidation of that complex element of fiscal administration—the tariff.

New Trinidad Stamps

Trinidad, B.W.I.—Trinidad may soon have a new issue of postage stamps to take the place of the present issue, which was brought out in 1922. A committee has been appointed by the Government to prepare a design, which is expected to be based on drawings depicting local agricultural products.

Obeying a Dare Man Loses Life

Climbs Tree at Port Burwell, Touches Hydro Wire

St. Thomas, Oct. 15. — Clyde Ashburn, a young married man of Port Burwell, was killed about 4.30 o'clock this afternoon when his hand came in contact with a live Hydro wire running through the limbs of a tree near his home.

The victim fell from the tree a distance of 15 or 20 feet. Employees of the rural Hydro Department, experienced in resuscitation, worked on the body for an hour. The victim's right hand and one foot were burned. An inquest has not been deemed necessary.

According to the report made, Ashburn climbed a maple tree in a spirit of fun, at the suggestion of one of the young men with whom he was walking. As he reached up to the clutch of a limb, his hand touched the high voltage wire. He was 31 years old, and leaves a young wife and child.

Poultry Thieves Take Big Risks in London

London.—Catching a robber of henroosts by making him take his own photograph in the act was so ingenius the magistrate who tried the culprit complimented the complainant.

The thief wisely said he had no defence.

The accused, Frederick Barnwell, charged with stealing two eggs from a hen house, had to face the photograph of himself in court.

William Norbury, complainant, said the photograph had been "taken by the prisoner himself." He said that owing to losses from his fowl house he fixed a camera which worked automatically.

The magistrate, Sir William Rice, complimented Mr. Norbury on his ingenuity, and remarked to the police inspector: "Have you a vacancy in the force for a young man of promise?" "I must have him around at my place," Sir William added.

Mr. Norbury had arranged his camera so that when anyone entered the fowl-house the shutter of the camera would open. A second device produced a click. Thereupon the intruder turned his face toward the camera and the photograph was taken.

Prince Is Eulogized By New Paris Paper

Paris.—The new Parisian daily newspaper Le Jour, appears with an eulogistic edtorial on the Prince of Wales. "The Prince, with the physical resistance of an athlete, endowed with extremely keen intellectual faculties, possessing unshakable moral stability, is the master of himself as he will one day be the master of half the globe," it said. "What one likes about him is that besides being the heir to a vast Empire, he is a man strong and independent, sure of himself and silently watching his destiny approaching him."

Hamilton Firestone Plant Increase Wages 10 P.C.

Hamilton.—Effective as of Oct. 9, wages at the local plant of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company were increased 10 per cent. All employees are included.

Confirming the report, William H. Funston, president and general manager, said the revision would mean payment of an additional $100,000 per year.

427 Left Service On September 1

One-Third of Veterans Retired Were Employed at Ottawa

Ottawa.—Only 427 were retired from the Civil Service as of September1 last under the new Government order making 65 years the retirement age. Less than half, probably about one-third of the number were in the service in Ottawa, the remainder scattered throughout the rest of the Dominion.

The total net saving to the country in respect to salaries will be $827,500 annually after the periods of retirement leave with full pay have lapsed. These periods extend from one or two months up to six months, dating in the cases of all the 427 retired from September 1.

There had been all sorts of estimates as to the effect of the order with predictions that it would mean 1,500 or more leaving the service. While there is that number if not more at or past the age of 65, the Government applied the order only in respect to those whose positions could be abolished. Others, who would have had to be replaced, were not affected.

The order was dated July 31 and applied only to civil servants who were 65 years of age on September 1. It does not apply to any reaching 65 sin then and it is learned that there is no disposition to do so since there has been a fairly thorough canvass of departments in Ottawa and Government offices elsewhere and it is felt that retirements have covered most of the positions that could be abolished.

Friday the Thirteenth Fatal For Cat, Sparrow

Winnipeg.—Seven sparrows pecked at a dribble of oat grains which fell from the feed bag of a tired milkman's horse early Friday. A cat leaped through the air and six flew away while the seventh lay in the cat's jaws. Frightened by the flutter of wings, the horse sprang forward and a wheel passed over the cat's body.

"Some folks don't take any stock in this Friday the 13th stuff," muttered the milkman, as he watched the performance.

Busy Day For Stork

Kitchener.—What a trouncing the Friday the 13th hoodoo took from the Bowman brothers! Alfred, Norman and Richard Bowman won't forget it, ever. All three are fathers. Unable to carry the three youngsters to three different homes in one day, the stork got away to a fast start by leaving a baby son at the home of Richard. He completed the triple blessing by delivering a son to Alfred's home and a daughter to Norman's house at Shantz Station. The other two brothers live at Winterbourne.

Rice Lake Hunters Report Season Good

Cobourg.—Duck hunters returning from Rice Lake report the best of luck. They say the majority of hunters secured their full allowance of birds. It is stated that the abundant crop of wild rice and celery has been the great attraction for these birds this season. The past three or four years the shooting has been very poor on account of the feed shortage.

William Tell Trick Blamed For Fatal Shooting of Boy

Apple and Rifle Used by Bowmanville Lads, and Game Ends in Death

Bowmanville, Oct. 15.—Shot through the head by a charge from a 22-calibre rifle in the hands of his brother-in-law, Arthur Hockett, Arthur E. Lewis, a 15-year-old Bowmanville lad, was fatally injured in the presence of his father on Saturday afternoon.

The father, son and Hockett had gone out shooting after dinner near the Goodyear plant flats and were returning when the Lewis lad is said to have challenged Hockett to hit his hat as he threw it in the air. Placing an apple in it, he threw it, and Hockett fired and missed. Taking the apple out, the lad threw it in the air again, and Hockett aimed and fired as it came down. Just as he pulled the trigger, the latter told Chief Constable Sydney Venton, he saw young Lewis either step or trip in front of him, and the charge hit him just behind the temple, coming out at the back of the head.

Seeing his son fall to the ground shot, Fred Lewis fainted, and it was not until Hockett had revived him that the two were able to carry the lad half a mile to the Goodyear plant, where Dr. C. W. Slemon was called to attend him. He was taken to Bowmanville Hospital, but he died seven hours later, at 8 o'clock on Saturday evening. Coroner Dr. V. H. Storey, after questioning the two who witnessed the accident, decided that an inquest was not necessary. Arthur Lewis, an only son, is survived by his parents and two sisters.

Tiger Footballer Has Neck Broken

Raymond Roach of Cubs in Cast—Hurt at Half-time

Hamilton, Oct. 15. — Raymond Roach, a half-back on the Hamilton Tiger Cubs football team, had his neck broken in the game with Balmy Beach here on Saturday afternoon.

Catching a kick a yard behind his own goal-line just before the half-time whistle, Roach was trying to run the ball out when two Balmy Beach wingmen closed in on him. He went down, dropped the ball and the play cost Tigers a safety touch.

Carried from the field on a stretcher, Roach was found by Dr. J. W. Tice, the club physician, and Dr. J. K. McGregor, to be paralyzed in one arm. He is in a cast at St. Joseph's Hospital, where physicians predict his recovery.

$1,750,000 Elevator

Contract for the 2,000,000 bushel elevator to be built at Erie Beach, near Fort Erie, has been let to a Toronto firm. Estimated cost is $1,750,000. Plans for the elevator were made after the British Government agreed to allow six-cents-a-bushel tariff preference on wheat shipped through Empire ports.

Honored By France

Montreal.—Pierre Charton, counsellor of foreign trade, has been named knight of the Legion of Honor, one of the highest honors bestowed by the French Government. He received the distinction in recognition of his efforts in promoting trade between France and Canada.

No More Sulphur!

Simcoe.—For years a spring has spouted sulphurous water for generations of Simcoe people. Recently it suddenly ran dry, its underground course presumably blocked or diverted. Now, just as suddenly, it has started to gush again—but there is not a trace of sulphur in its water.

Late Potatoes Yielding Better

Root Crops Improve—Recent Rains Encourage Planting of Fall Wheat

New Road.—The frequent rains have encouraged a number of farmers to put in some fall wheat even at this late date. Owing to the dry weather unless the ground has been plowed early, working the soil was found impossible, so the last week or so has seen quite an acreage sown following the rains.

Apple picking is well under way but the reports from the orchards are not promising a very heavy yield of good fruit.

There is still a small amount of barn threshing to be done; also some buckwheat and millet outside, but as most of the threshing is from the stook only a few farmers put their grain in the barn and this week will nearly finish the threshing.

The roots begin to show the effects of the rains and if fine weather continues there will still be a fair crop of turnips and other roots. The late potatoes are also much better than the early ones but not of as good quality as is usual in these parts. Beans are not yielding the usual crop

The tobacco is now harvested and in the barns awaiting the buyers.

Woman Accidentally Shot by Husband While Hunting

Parry Sound, Oct. 15.—Mrs. H. Polkinghorne is in hospital here recovering from wounds inflicted when she stepped in front of her husband just as he was firing a shotgun. With four others, Mr. and Mrs. Polkinghorne were hunting. The party had spread out, and just as her husband fired she stepped from behind a large rock. A number of pellets struck her in the back. Her condition is regarded as favorable.

Blame Bear for Killing Sheep at Glasgow Farm

Glasgow, Ont.—Following the killing of a sheep at the farm of Henry Simpson here, and the sighting of a big black bear believed to be the killer, residents of this district were on a hunt for the marauder. Car loads of armed men scattered throughout the vicinity of the Simpson farm watching for Mr. Bruin.

Severe Weather Is Predicted

Fort Erie Weather Prophet Gives Reason for His Forecast of Cold Weather

Fort Erie, Ont.—The annual goosebone prophecy for the Niagara peninsula has been issued by Joey O'Connor, 60-year-old resident of Fort Erie south. Mr. O'Connor has been prognosticating for 12 years in Fort Erie and claims never to have made a wrong prediction.

Here are his reasons the coming winter will be a cold and harsh one: The thickness of bark on the north sides of elm trees, size of bush in the tails of squirrels and the earliness of dogs in shedding their coats. The height of the weeds will be the depth of the amount of snow to fall and are said to be unusually high. Prior to coming to Fort Erie O'Connor obtained a wide reputation as a goosebone prophet in Ridgeway, Pa., where folks ordered their coal supply in accordance with his prediction, he claims.

Charges of Insincerity In Disarming Unfounded

Statesmen of Four Big Powers Confer Throughout Sunday on Outcome of German Withdrawal

Berlin.—Germany, in bitter anger, announced her withdrawal from the League of Nations and the World Disarmament Conference.

Although two years' notice is required before Germany ceases to be a member of the League, her delegates were instructed not to attend a Council meeting and to return home.

Berlin, Oct. 15.—Under the dictatorial control of Adolf Hitler, her Reichstag and state parliaments dissolved, Germany stood tonight divorced in intention from the family of nations at Geneva and outside the disarmament conference.

On November 12 elections to the Reichstag and a plebiscite will be held in order to enable the people to express their approval of the course of the Nazi regime. Indications are that only Nazi names will appear on the ballots against which the voters may write "yea" or "nay."

Geneva, Oct. 15.—Statesmen of the four big powers decided today—that the Disarmament Conference should adjourn for approximately a week, but there were asurances that if the conference dies, at least it will die slowly.

After a day-long discussion of the gravity of Germany's withdrawal from the Disarmament Conference and the League of Nations, representatives of Great Britain, the British Dominions, France, Italy and the United States refused to admit that disarmament is a dead cause.

The adjournment was considered necessary for a world-wide inventory of the international situation. Governments must deliberate. Cabinets must meet.

So serious, indeed, was Germany's bolt from the machinery of international life, that governments will want to consult with one another. Without effective German participation the statesmen seemed fully to realize that it will scarcely be practical to make a convention.

Growth of the Reading Habit In the Old Country

Public libraries in the Old Country have shown a remarkable growth in recent years, observes the Toronto Mail and Empire in this editorial. On the eve of the opening of the Library Association Conference at Harrogate, the London Sunday Observer published an interview on the subject with Mr. L. J. Packington, chief librarian at Lambeth, a copy of which has been forwarded to us by Dr. George H. Locke, chief librarian, Toronto Public Library.

"The county libraries," Mr. Packington said, "now supply books to about 18,000,000 persons in rural and small urban districts. In 1931-32 there were 34,000,000 book issues in 110 counties in Great Britain and Ireland, and the cost of the service was only £255,000—a decrease of £12,000 as compared with the preceding twelve months. In the case of tiny villages, it is always possible to fit up a library in a school, or to get at the people by means of a traveling van, and the books are always welcome. I may add that the provision of library facilities in these rural areas has in many instances been made possible only by the generosity of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, which has made extensive grants to library authorities throughout the country. The figures I have given do not, of course, take into account the London libraries and those of the larger towns throughout the country as these are not under the jurdisdiction of the county authorities. The following figures of issues for home reading purposes, however, show the growth of the reading habit among the people of London: 1910-11, 7,855,962; 1920-21, 8,559,745; 1931-32, 19,412,462."

Taking his own borough of Lambeth as an illustration, Mr. Packington mentioned that in 1927 the six lending libraries were issuing some 800,000 books annually, but last year the issue amounted to 1,600,000. The percentage of novels read tends to decrease. The public are certainly turning more and more to modern travel, history, and biography; and that change in taste may be explained by the fact that, in these branches, considered merely as recreational literature, books are written in a much more readable and attractive form than in the past.

How to Learn

When the old world blames and slanders us, our business is not to be vexed at it, but rather to consider whether there is any foundation for it, any truth at the bottom, though there be exaggeration and mistake. I conceive a person may always gain good to his own soul, gain instruction and useful suggestion, by the mistakes of the world about him."—J. H. Newman.

Toys and games are available in a novel free lending library for children recently opened in New York.

Brother of Peer is London Meat Buyer

He strides among the crowd of overalled, straw-hatted buyers in Smithfield Meat Market, a tall man of military bearing.

Courteous always, yet as keen as any in his choice of the meat which presently will be carried away for sale in London butcher shops.

Some of the other buyers know him by sight and nod in greeting. But they do not know his name.

Their co-buyer is Lord Victor Paget, brother of the Marquis of Anglesey, and a member of one of Britain's oldest families.

Lord Victor has entered the meat trade with a friend. For the past few weeks he has been learning the ropes in Smithfield Market when the rest of London is asleep.

Those who know him say his progress has been rapid.

Lord Victor said: "My part of the business will be the actual buying and selling at Smithfield.

"My experience of meat was gained years ago in Canada," he said.

"I punched cows in the summer months and spent the winter months as a trapper—both professions giving a great deal of instruction in raw meat."

A new package for apples consisting of a corrugated paper carton holding a dozen apples has been devised by the Dominion Experimental Station at Fredricton, N.B. The top is covered with cellophane, exposing every apple to view.

Why So Serious?

She laid the still white form beside those which had gone before. No sob, no sigh, forced its way from her heart, throbbing as though it would burst. Suddenly a cry broke the stillness of the place—one heart-breaking shriek. Then another cry. More silence. Then all silent but for a guttural murmur, which seemed to well up from the very soul. She left the place. She would lay another egg to-morrow.

Told By a Drug Store Clerk

A Short Story
By Marjorie Elliott Wilkins

There certainly are a queer lot of ingredients in the human recipe. Spicy bits, and good solid material, and some people who are so bright they leaven the whole mass. Some are so sad and heavy you wonder why they are there at all. And there's always a few who seem like luxuries. Seem to add a little refinement to the flavour. That's what those two were like. I never knew what his name was. I've always just called him The Man. We used to call her Mrs. Alexander. But he called her Natalie.

If there's any place where you see more kinds of people than in a railway drug store. I haven't worked there yet. That's where I got the idea of the human recipe. Probably had something to do with those two.

Somehow we were all surprised when Mrs. Alexander came to scrub the floor at the drug store. She was different to other scrub women who'd been there. The proudest thing you ever saw, too, and pretty, only in a distant sort of way. More like a picture than a real, live person. The sort of woman men are conscious of. She wasn't any ordinary ingredient.

She used to come early in the morning, and she always did the part by the door first, as if she'd like to get that done before too many folks came in. There's a train at 7.10. He must have come on that, because Mrs. Alexander hadn't changed the first pail of water yet. I was dusting the toothbrushes, right near the door, and saw it all. He was like her. Didn't look like her exactly, but like her anyway. Maybe because he didn't come from this country. He was French or Russian, or maybe English. You can always tell. Handkerchief tucked up the sleeve, little clipped moustache—made me think of the tooth-brushes I was dusting—and wide trousers.

He wasn't very much awake, and he almost fell over Mrs. Alexander. It was the queerest thing but just in that second while he was nearly falling over her, I sort of saw her through his eyes. Her hair was done different to what anybody in this country would do it. Loosely knotted. Crisp, and a mixture of bronze and copper. Leaning over the scrub pail had made little, damp curls round her neck. One curled under her ear. I'd always known she was pretty. Now she looked like a pearl in a dish of prunes.

"I beg your pardon, Madame," he stammered, looking as if he didn't know whether to climb over her or to back out.

"Not at all, Monsieur," she murmured in that voice which was different to any one else's. Like the kind of poetry they used to write. For the smallest moment she was flustered. Then she moved the heavy scrubbing bucketful of syruppy, mud-coloured water, and shifted the old bit of gunnysack she was kneeling on. The way she did it made me think of how Queen Mary might let you know she didn't want to talk to you any more. Yet it was funny, because she was only the scrub-woman in Langley's Drug Store. And there's better places to scrub than a drug store. Usually they're pretty filthy.

Would you believe it, the man just took off his hat, took it right off, and backed out? Maybe he didn't remember who she was then, but he knew he'd seen her somewhere.

Mrs. Alexander didn't say anyting about it. Just went on scrubbing. Only her neck was pink under those little damp curls.

Later in the morning he came back.

"May I see the manager?"

Mr. Langley was right there, so I heard everything.

"I—can you tell me, please, the name of your—er—charwoman?"

"The scrubwoman? That's Mrs. Alexander.

"Yeah. I don't blame you for asking, mister. There's something queer there. She wasn't made for a scrubwoman. She's too high-brow. Might be sort of royalty with that red hair. Proud as Lucifer himself. I tried to help her out. Got sat on. She just said she realized she wasn't trained for any industrial work. That was all. Wouldn't even tell me where she lived."

The man explained, very politely, that Mrs. Alexander resembled someone he had known years ago.

"Yeah? Personally I'd say she didn't look like anybody but herself. She comes in here every morning. You'd better talk to her yourself."

Well, he was outside the drug store next morning soon after seven. Mrs. Alexander was scrubbing the dirtiest bit by the door and he just stood and watched her through the glass. The way her slim shoulders drooped was disturbing, all right. When she wrung out the slimy cloth the muscles ran up and down her arms. Pretty as a picture. Her breasts moved quickly and she was all flushed with the hard work.

And there was the man watching her from outside so curiously.

Maybe she felt someone was there. Anyway, she wiped her hands on her skirt, and pushed back her thick hair, impatiently. That movement seemed to tell him who she was. Suddenly he lost his puzzled look, and opened the door. He was disgusted and terribly happy, all at once.

"Natalie," he cried, "Natalie!"

She got right up. Her dark eyes looked as if they'd seen Heaven, and didn't know it was real. The man wasn't any stranger to her even though she was surprised and looked as if she'd seen a ghost. She'd forgotten the scrub bucket.

Suddenly she remembered. The way she looked hurt me inside. All at once she grew taller and her chin went up. She spoke very slow, the way you do when you're trying not to cry and you're afraid you're going to.

"Monsieur has made some mistake. It is that you thought you had found a friend? I am sorry. It is not I."

"But Natalie, you know me. You recognized me—Natalie Alexandrova, Natalie, loveliest in Paris and Petrograd—the—the last of your great family."

"Monsieur — you—make — a—mistake."

"Madame, for the sake of the past you must acknowledge me. You must stop this—vile drudgery. It's——"

"Monsieur!"

"You will permit me to help you? To call on you?"

Her chin was proud even though her fingers squeezed the scrub cloth till it was dry.

"Will you please leave—immediately?"

"Of course, Madame."

He did leave her, hat off just like the last time. But he came back again. He had to know Madame's address. But he didn't get it. She was the lady he thought she resembled.

"And she turned down your offer of help?" The boss evidently doubted it. Yet the man seemed to understand.

"She is of the old nobility. Naturally she has great pride. To her such poverty is degradation."

"Sounds pretty queer to me. Mebbe some of those nobility have got some highgalutin' notions. But I guess they aren't crazy. You just made a mistake, Mister."

"There is no chance of a mistake. You see, sir, I loved her. And it was I who gave her that little filagree chain she wears about her neck."

Mrs. Alexander never came back. Can you understand folks being as proud as that?

Autumn Forest

(Midnight)

Hushed midnight, and the trees a net of black;
A moon of jade against a mackerel sky.
The reeling depths. . . . The glinting star-lit track. . . .
How infinitely pitiful to die!

(Morning)

Sun-given gold, the drift of yellow wealth,
The last largesse the trembling maples give.
The glorious copper hills. . . The glow of health. . . .
How perfectly exultant, just to live!

The Clipper

Her sails are strong and yellow as the sand,
Her spars are tall and supple as the pine,
And, like the bounty of a generous mine
Sun-touched, her brasses flash on every hand.
Her sheer takes beauty from a golden band,
Which, sweeping aft, is taught to twist and twine
Into a scroll, and badge of quaint design
Hang on her quarters. Insolent and grand
She drives. Her stem rings loudly as she throws
The hissing sapphire into foamy waves,
While on her weather bends the copper blows
In burnished splendor. Rolling down she laves
Her high black sides until the scupper flows,
Then pushing out her shapely bow she braves
The next tall sea, and, leaping, onward goes.

Here's a Man's Idea Of Housewives' Code

St. Louis.—A code for United States housewives has been drafted by Judge M. Hartmann of the Court of Domestic Relations here, but it doesn't resemble the one by "Mrs. L.T.P.," of Nederland, Tex., who urged, among other things, that wives be allowed to sleep late at least two days a week.

"Why," says Judge Hartmann, "the wife should arise at least one hour before the husband and have his pipe lit and his morning paper at hand for him.

"Except on Sunday, a husband is entitled to a hot, substantial dinner each night of the week. Cold cuts and sardines are taboo.

"A wife should find recreation in whatever form of entertainment her husband prefers, whether it be reading, music, the movies, golf or football.

"After giving 10 per cent. of his salary to his wife for personal expenses, and paying the household bills, the husband is entitled to the balance—if any."

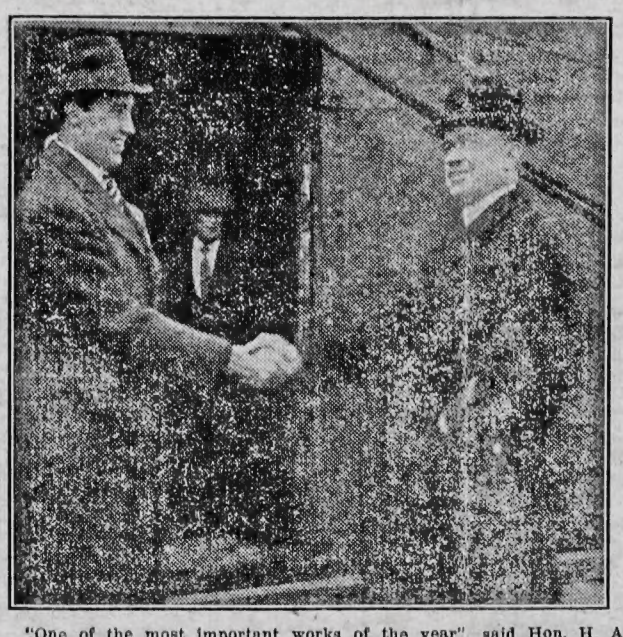
And, Judge Hartmann adds, the husband is entitled "to an affectionate welcome" on his return home at nights.

South Africa Puts Color in Locomotives

Worcester, S.Af.—South Africa has started a "brighter train" movement. Pretoria has a locomotive painted green, picked out with cream. Bloemfontein boasts a blue and cream one, and now Cape Town has followed suit with a beautiful blue engine.

The idea behind the use of brighter colors seems to be that the running staff are likely to take more pride in their charges and make greater efforts to keep them spick and span. At the same time, in order to effect economy in "spares," the various local works depots are now turning out two standardized types of boilers which are interchangeable on various types of locomotives.

"Lost Port" of the Lakes Comes Back to Shipping Routes



"One of the most important works of the year", said Hon. H. A. Stewart, Federal Minister of Public Works, as he declared the new harbor of Leamington Ontario, officially open. Missing from navigation routes for two generations, Leamington, now ketchup capital of Canada, is revived as a port in order to facilitate the distribution in Canada and abroad of agricultural products from the area. Photo shows: Hon. Mr. Stewart with H. J. Heinz II as the first freighter, S.S. City of Windsor of Canada Steamship Lines, is loaded with cargo for shipment to Africa and England.

"Children Should Be Seen, Not Heard," Thing of Past

Psychologists Advise Parents To Allow Youngsters to Argue and Express Opinions

We have now departed from the ancient tradition of silence for our children upon all except privileged occasions. We permit them to be heard much more freely in the general sense, but we have not yet come to the point of allowing them to make themselves heard to the extent of expressing individual opinions and rejecting time-honored customs. In short, we do not suffer contradiction gladly.

A student of child psychology advised mothers in a recent talk to allow their children to argue, and justified her advice by saing that argument in children is not rudeness but merely the satisfying of curiosity.

"Back Answers"

Now we are prepared to admit that however much the average mother may respect the pronouncement of experts, she will experience a reaction of slight shock at the idea that she should tolerate for one instant a form of conversation known colloquially in families as "back answers." It seems contrary to all ideas of maternal dignity and discipline.

A mother of our acquaintance said: "When my child started to question the infallible wisdom of my words and to jib against established traditions I felt the world was coming to an end, but I soon found myself adopting what I now know to be the views of experts on children.

Exercising Brain

"A child has as much right to exercise its brain as its body. Any mildly discerning mother is able to distinguish rudeness from curiosity before the first word of the question is lisped.

"Of course, in allowing children to argue, one must be prepared that they may, in the classic phrase, become "inebriated with the exuberance of their own verbosity," and at this point the wise parent will, editorial fashion, intimate that the correspondence is discontinued; but before such a point is reached the little mind can have done a good deal of groping and received both stimulus and enlightenment.

"You'll know all about that when the time comes" is a most feeble answer to make to childish questions, since the "time" has obviously come for explanation when the question is propounded.

Father William's Tactics

"Admitted that an argumentative child can be intensely irritating, there comes at some time or another to the most tolerant of us the impulse to fall back on Father William's tactics and say: 'I have answered three questions and that is enough. . . .' But we must remember that the fourth question may be intended to settle for all time the problem that is buzzing about in the small brain."

"Whenever tempted to take up an imperious adult attitude," another mother said, "I remind myself of a relative who forbade me to read the works of a certain authoress then in great vogue because—so he asserted—the books were 'rubbish that only an idiot would read'."

'When I meekly inquired whether my uncle had read any of these books himself, he ordered me summarily to bed—whither I went, amused, unconvinced and feeling that somehow or other I had got the best of the argument. I know I should hate to think that any child had as little respect for my intelligence as I had for that of my august relative.

Intelligence Needs Satisfying

Summed up, and taking all the pros and cons into consideration, it seems we must accept the fact that when a child is intelligent enough to argue, it is intelligent enough to be worth putting in the right direction and the earlier this is done the better for all concerned.

Knowledge cannot be put into niches; the demand for it comes to some sooner than to others, and we must remember that when a person of any age has asked a question, he or she will not rest until the answer to that question has been discovered.

On the other hand, this acceptance of childish curiosity is not meant to imply that one should indulge in interminable argument, when any element of cantankerousness is introduced by the other side, the wise mother shrugs her shoulders and turns the conversation more in sorrow than in anger.

As a result of these tactics the young seeker after truth will, in all probability, apologize for being "silly." And what more healthy manifestation could any parent demand in return for patient explanation and slightly frayed nerves?

It's A Queer World

Peddling seems a prosperous "profession" in Italy these days. The National Federation of Pedlars has just resolved o establish a Sickness Fund for the Gentlemen of the Profession. Street hawkers in Rome are already enjoying the benefits of such a fund. Now these benefits are to be extended to all provinces, where it is estimated that 5,000 members can be gathered.

The Berlin fire brigade was recently summoned to a tea garden to remove a swarm of bees from the plentiful white beard of an elderly man who had fallen asleep on a shady bench.

Last year 10,251 wrecked or worn-out motor-cars were abandoned by their owners in the streets of New York City—an average of one every fifty-one minutes.

Stockley, a village in Wiltshire, has no church, post-office, school, or public house for its population of sixty-nine, of whom more than one-third are drawing the old-age pension.

WATCH YOUR DIET

By Bon Saute

Good health is largely a matter of common sense, health knowledge and self-discipline; bad health, the lack of it. Since mankind lives in an atmosphere which is filled with germs one's susceptibility to disease is largely dependent on the condition of one's health. The healthy person, therefore, is less liable to be stricken with some contagious or infectious disease than one who is in bad health, and certainly diseased organisms are usually the culmination of a chronic state of bad health.

Take the common cold. One catches a cold because of a low resistance within the body which is not able to withstand the cold germ. Lack of, or too much, exercise, combined with some dietetic indiscretions have probably created the condition of low resistance.

Neglect a cold and soon a condition of chronic bronchitis follows. What constitutes neglect? Usually a failure to observe sound health laws, which call for moderate exercise, fresh air and a balanced diet.

Neglect bronchitis and asthma, tuberculosis and all sorts of nose, throat and lung complications are liable to follow, all of which could have been avoided by the application of common sense health knowledge and self-discipline to one's daily life.

This question of health is really a very serious matter, although looking at the habits of many people one would scarcely think so. Our hospitals are jammed to overflowing suffering from one thing and another, and thousands upon thousands of apparently well people are heading straight for the operating table by the utter recklessness of their daily habits—more particularly that of food.

It surely must be plain A B C to any intelligent person that if one is feeling out of sorts there is a basic cause for it, and it should be the business of everyone to find out that cause. Doctors and dietetians will tell you that the usual cause is diet.
